Now With F.M.L.

SLOW, BUT SOMETIME. . .

Getting the tennis courts finished in City Park is sorta like getting access to the new Milam County Museum.

NOW-NOW-NOW

Originality is suspect where there is none. Formality is inadequate where there is lack of confidence. Nitpickers bug me.

NOW-NOW-NOW

Big is as big as big does.

NOW-NOW-NOW

Deadline is hanging in there. Mumbling, she said she looked forward to the time when she could "waffle" her fur in the familiar, cramped discomfort of a Herald wire copybasket.

NOW-NOW-NOW

The split votes these days in city council and school board issues show the determination of trustees and council to vote what they think.

This is healthy. A lot more progress comes out of open disagreement and re-alignment than consistent "go along to get along" covering dissatisfactions.

It demonstrates the youth of these boards and a sense of individual contribution which fails of "busting" up everything; rather, it forms a "more perfect union" when agreement occurs.

(These bi-centennial years creep into everything, even a typewriter.)

NOW-NOW-NOW

Looking over the Yoe varsity practice the other day, I could only opine: "It's the biggest football team this town can remember and potentially the best."

It's timely. Cameron is doing many things, things other communities by the hundreds watch.

Fire Interrupts Alcoa Production

ROCKDALE

An electrical fire in the carbon plant at Alcoa's Rockdale Works at 7 a.m. last Friday interrupted production in pressing, packing, add pulling areas until mid-afternoon. The fire started when an open circuit developed in tie-in feeder cables near the roof of the mixing building, a spokesman said. Rockdale Works' fire brigade and volunteers promptly extinguished the blaze after the circuit was de-energized.

Trustees Raise Valuations

MILANO

Faced with the task of raising $39,000 in additional local tax revenue, Milano school trustees have notified taxpayers by letter that valuations have been raised "to the approximate figure the state has assigned as fair market value." The letter to taxpayers lays the blame squarely on House Bill 1126, recently enacted public school legislation.

Rescue Attempts Fail

SOMERVILLE

Samuel Luera, 27, of Brenham, drowned in Lake Somerville at about 4:15 p.m. last Sunday, August 10. The drowning occurred about 35 yards from shore in 12 feet of water. The man was reported to have jumped into the water from a boat to swim to shore. Panic apparently caused the victim to fail to respond to attempts to save him. Other passengers in the boat could not swim.

Board Passes Record Budget

BELTON

The Belton school board passed a 1975-76 budget of $3,472,805 at Monday's session. The tax rate was set at $1.50 in 40 percent of valuation, with $1.20 designated for maintenance and operation and 30 cents for the interest and sinking fund. The school district has a valuation of $51,784,960 under the re-evaluation program which the school board ordered in 1974.

Ping Pong Balls Shower Town

CALDWELL

Several hundred persons attended the "Ping Pong Shower" Saturday in downtown Caldwell. Sponsored by the Retail Merchants Committee of the Caldwell Chamber of Commerce, the event was scheduled to promote shopping Caldwell for their back to school needs. Thirty-three of the 300 balls dropped from a single-engine plane entitled the holders to a number of prizes donated by the city merchants.

Hearne Man Gets 15 Years

HEARNE

Audrie L. Fuller Jr., 27, Hearne black male, was sentenced to 15 years in the state penitentiary in Franklin District Court on a charge of aggravated attempted rape. Judge W. C. Wallace presided over the court and sentenced Fuller. Fuller was arrested in Hearne August 4 on the charge of attempting to rape an 80-year old Negro woman in Hearne on July 24.

Damage Suit Names City

GATESVILLE

A $100,000 damage suit was filed in District Court in Gatesville Monday against the city of Gatesville by injured workman Floyd Truelove. Truelove's right leg was severed between the knee and ankle last June 23 when he was struck by front-end loader being used to clean a sludge pit at the city's sewage disposal plant. The petition charges that "careless and negligent acts" caused the accident.

City Hires Rate Expert

LAMPASAS

After delaying action on a Lone Star Gas Co. rate increase, Lampasas city councilmen voted to hire a rate consultant to review the gas company's request and make a recommendation at a future meeting. Hiring the consultant, who will charge about $240 a day, was over the protests of Councilman E. E. Ohnmeiss, who told the council the city would be "wasting its money" to hire a consultant.

SPECIAL TREAT for the Yoemen, hailed as No. 1, was this "spirit cake" in the shape of number one, baked by the Yoe High cheerleaders, and enjoyed Thursday by members of the Yoemen squad. Here Coach Ed Cauley prepares to make the first cut while Yoemen and cheerleaders look on.

Members of the Cameron area Chamber will honor Cameron school personnel with an ice cream supper Thursday evening, August 21 at 7 p.m. at City Park.

The Yoe High band will give a concert and new school personnel will be introduced by Supt. Buddy Dulin.

The event is sponsored by the Education Committee of the Chamber, John Homerstad chairman, with the assistance of the Chamber's Ladies Committee.

Special invitations are extended to all school employees, chamber members, Yoe band students and parents. Those attending are encouraged to bring along a lawn chair. If anyone would like to sign up to bring a freezer of homemade ice cream who has not already done so, just call the Chamber office at 697-2541.

The Education Committee is also providing coffee and donuts for the first day of in-service training for teachers on Monday, August 18.

"We have a splended group of administrators, teachers, and overall personnel in our local schools, and we just want them to know how much we appreciate the good job they do," stated Chairman Homerstad.

This committee soonsors an event annually to honor school personnel.

Deadline Extended For Land Heritage Program

AUSTIN

The deadline for mailing applications to the Family Land Heritage Program has been extended until August 31, Agriculture Commissioner John C. White has announced.

In the past few weeks applications have been coming in at the rate of five a day, Commissioner White reported.

"We have the feeling that many people are just now hearing about the Program and need more time to gather historical background on their property."

The Family Land Heritage Program is in its second year, having honored over 560 families last year for farming or ranching the same land for over 100 years. So far this year there are over 100 who have qualified.

"Some applicants do not understand all the rules for this award. Since the Program was initiated to honor people who have actively worked their land, if all the land has ever been leased to anyone outside the family, the farm will not qualify," White said.

If persons wishing to apply cannot get forms from the county judge's office, they should write John C. White, Commissioner, Texas Department of Agriculture Family Land Heritage Program, P. O. Box 12847, Austin, TX 78711.

The form should be completed and certified by the county judge in the county in which the land is located. Then the applications should be mailed to the Department address above.

Houston Bank Buys Oil Mill In Thorndale

The Cen-Tex Cotton Oil Mill in Thorndale has been bought by the Houston Bank for Cooperatives at a sale held at the Milam County courthouse last Monday.

The bank held mortgages on the mill and has appointed a substitute trustee after the mill had defaulted in its payments.

The trustee, Tom Shipp, announced the sale of the assets of the mill, which was held at the county courthouse.

At that time, the bank bought the assets, Cen-Tex President R. D. Reeves of San Gabriel said.

Reeves said the directors had a "wait and see" attitude after the sale.

Reeves was elected president of Cen-Tex at a board of directors meeting. Melvin Weise of Thorndale was elected vice-president and Ralph Bachmeyer of Taylor was elected secretary-treasurer, Reeves added.

He also said the mill no longer has a manager.

During its last fiscal year, the mill reported gross sales of almost $3.8 million. It was organized in 1943 by 11 cooperative gins and its membership had grown to 30 gins by 1973.

Library Board Elects Officers, Adopts Budget

Mrs. Perry Holder will serve as president of the Cameron Public Library board, following her election at a recent board meeting. Vice-president is Richard Crowe and Mrs. Ed Magre was elected secretary treasurer.

Other members of the board present were L. W. Stroup Jr., Maxie Morgan, Rufus Floyd, Mrs. Carroll Green, Mrs. Willis Looney, librarian; and Mrs. Mary Buck, president of Friends of the Library.

Other business included the adoption of the budget for the new year to be presented to the city council for approval. Stroup reported that the leaks in the roof have been repaired and that new locks were being installed on all doors.

Commissioners Increase Jury Pay To $10

County Commissioners meeting Thursday set the rate of pay for jurors who serve at $10 per day, with a $5 fee for those who are called but do not serve. This was at the suggestion of District Judge W. C. Wallace.

The court also agreed to increase the county's share of the wolf trapper's salary $25 per month. Commissioners emphasized that any confirmed case of an animal killed by a wolf should be reported immediately to the trapper, Clifford Morgan, so that he can check on it.

In other business, commissioners discussed having a local electrician handle elevator repairs; heard that constables want more expense money; heard reports from county officials; and discussed re-routing of Freezout Road, to be financed by Alcoa.

Exhaustive Reappraisal...

A lot has been made of re-opening the Warren Report on the assassination of John Kennedy.

But now a California judge has officially re-opened the investigation into the 1968 murder of Robert Kennedy.

The Kennedy family continues to support the findings of the Warren Commission, though it is probably a moot point to them how the former President was shot. He is gone.

But at least one other victim in the California shooting of the former senator is being called during a re-examination of a "second gun theory." Ballistics tests suggest an accomplice may have scattered some shots during the successful attempt on Robert Kennedy in his campaign hotel.

Dozens of people have become expert in pursuing the bizarre events following the assassination of John Kennedy and wounding of John Connally in Dallas. Strange deaths and inexplicable "accidents" have seemed to trail the events of that November 1963 day.

No one officially, however, has re-opened the case. Perhaps if they establish a conspiracy in the California assassination which jailed Sirhan B. Sirhan for life, officials may then report the Warren Commission findings for an exhaustive reappraisal.

Elm Creek Watershed...

The overflows along the Elm Creek Watershed may yet be abated following Milam Commissioner approval of the watershed plan, also approved by Soil Conservation Service in Washington.

Losses this year midst extraordinary rains have been heavy in maize. The dam control system proposed in Elm Creek Watershed would have prevented most, if not all, this loss.

We congratulate Milam Commissioners for again urging by approval that this project be funded in the Congress so that hundreds of square miles of land, crops, pasture, not to mention fences, gates, and perhaps outside buildings, are free of inundation.

We reiterate Herald support for the project, which covers hundreds of square miles in parts of four counties, assures construction of dozens of water-control structures and small lakes between Temple and Cameron and looks to alternative sources for water in dry years.

It would be nice to have some water control in that area this spring-early summer.

Italian Motorists Mourn Passing Of Beloved Fiat

By Robin Lustig

ROME

Reuter--An entire generation of Italian motorists is mourning the loss of a beloved friend--the tiny, trusted Fiat 500, first of the world's mini-cars and symbol of Italian family motoring.

The recent announcement that Fiat has stopped production of the 500 range after 18 years marked the end of an era in this car-happy country. More than four million of the squat little Fiats have been manufactured since the first model was unveiled to a skeptical public in 1957.

But the soon came to occupy a very special place in the Italian social consciousness. "For many drivers, the 500 is like their first love--never to be forgotten," commented one newspaper.

For thousands of Italian motorists, the noisy uncomfortable "Cinquencento" was their first car. Lovingly cared for, repaired in the back yard, endlessly repainted and rebuilt, it was the car that enabled millions to graduate from the Vespa or Lambretta scooters which dominated Italy in the 1950s.

No one who has even driven in Italy will forget the frustration of coming up behind a vastly over-laden, slow-moving Fiat 500 crawling along at about 35 miles per hour in the middle of the road.

Although officially billed as four-seater, the Fiat 500 never offered much comfort to more than two. "Four people didn't exactly travel in a Cinquencento, they tried to survive," observed one Italian motorist.

Despite being designed as an economy-sized vehicle, families manage to squeeze an astonishing number of people in. One battered little Fiat was observed recently laden with three adults, five children, and an enormous amount of luggage.

It has long been a standard feature of Italian highway life to see seemingly endless lines of Fiat 500s carrying thousands of industrial workers home each August to Sicily or Calabria from the factories in Turin and Milan.

A few weeks later, the same cars can be observed making the journey back north again, this time groaning under the weight of flagons of wine, cured hams, and giant cheeses provided by tearful relatives to help the young worker through the hard winter.

Italians talk of the Fiat 500 with the affection normally reserved for a close relative. For many of them it marked their coming of age--parents gave one to their 18-year old son or daughter as a birthday present.

Then there was the enthusiast who replaced the 500cc two-cylinder engine with which his Fiat was originally equipped for a two liter version taken from a Panhard Tiger. He claimed he could get up to speeds approaching 125 miles per hour before taking off.

His performance gave rise to an anxious letter in motoring magazine from the driver of an Alfa-Romeo, who said he had been passed at enormous speed on the motorway by what looked like a Fiat 500.

He didn't think he had imagined it, the driver wrote, but he might have been mistaken--the car wasjust going too fast to be sure.

US Seeks Answer To Life On Mars

By Walter J. Bagley
Rueters Science Writer

NEW YORK

Reuter--The United States having fulfilled one of the world's oldest quests by landing men on the moon, this month undertakes to answer one of the oldest questions--whether there is life on Mars.

NASA is sending two identical spacecraft on separate 440-million mile journeys to the mysterious red planet. Each will soft-land a package of highly sophisticated instruments on its cold,dry surface.

The unprecedented planetary landing, named Viking, is specifically designed to detect signs of life on Mars--either present or past.

The tiny spider-like craft that will land on Mars will carry a number of intricate devices and sensitive instruments for investigating the composition of the planet's surface and atmosphere.

In addition, the large spacecraft which carried the lander on its interplanetary journey will remain in orbit, taking its own measurements and pictures and relaying them back to earth.

The dual data-gathering process will enable scientists to correlate the information the lander obtains from its close-up vantage point with the "big picture" the orbiter can provide from high above. This will help scientists analyze the planet's weather, physical characteristics, and seismic activity.

But still, what the Viking mission is really all about is the search for traces of life on earth's nearest neighbor.

To do this the 200-pound landerwill perform several extremely elaborate experiments with Martian samples gathered by the lander.

In one photosynthesis, the process by which plants on earth use carbon dioxide and sunlight to live,will be duplicated in a special chamber aboard the lander.

The carbon dioxide to be used will be "labelled" with a radioactive tracer which will be detected if it combines with an organic molecule in photosynthesis--a sure indication of planet life on the planet.

Living things also nourish themselves by consuming organic materals, such as sugars, fats, and proteins.

To investigate this, other Martian samples will be "fed" organic compounds containing radioactive tracers. If the sample contains organisms that can consume the compounds, the process will give off wastes--which will contain the tracers.

A third experiment will concentrate on the process of metabolism, but which living things change chemicals into energy, which results in changes in an oganism's gaseous enviornment.

To study this, a Martian sample will be doused with a growth medium inside a chamber containing Martian atmosphere. If metabolism takes place, monitors inside the chamber will indicate changes in the composition of the atmosphere's gases.

The Viking lander will also perform a number of experiments to analyze the chemical composition of the planet's soil and atmosphere--in a further search for life but also to gain a better overall understanding of the planet, its make up, and history.

The Viking orbiter and lander are also equipped with extremely advanced television and photographic cameras which will send back thousands of pictures of the red planet from near and far.

The orbiter will carry two identical television cameras which will be able to distinguish objects on the Martian surface the size of a football stadium.

The lander will also have two TV cameras--which will act similar to human eyes. They will be able to focus in on the surface just below them or scan the distant horizon, giving a 360-degree panorama of the landscape.

The two craft will also be packed with highly advanced pre-programmed computers which will initiate and carry out many of the complicated functions the explorers must perform.

Because they will be hundreds of millions of miles from earth, it would take too long for instructions from earth to reach them during many time-crucial activities --such as the landing. So they must do much of the work themselves.

The first Viking was scheduled to be launched by a Titan-Centaur rocket from Cape Canaveral,Florida, on August 11--with a sister ship being launched about ten days later.

Once in space, the two craft will fly in an ever-increasing solar orbit, chasing Mars until they finally reach it almost a year after launch.

All spacecraft operations, including course changes, will be performed by the onboard computers. Even the intricate descent through Mars' thin atmosphere and the delicate landing on its strange surface will be controlled by the computers.

It would take 40 minutes for the Viking to send a message back to earth and then receive an answer-

Letters

To whom it may concern

To the man driving a red car and passing a truck on a wet bridge 4 1/2 miles south of Golinda, Texas around 4:40 p.m. Saturday, August 9.

You knew you were meeting a lot of on-coming traffic head on. But you inconsiderate weaver, you came around that truck anyway. My husband saved your life, mine, and his by hitting the bridge railing, wrecking our car, to give you room to get by. As you continued on endangering lives and limbs, at about 80 miles per hour, Mr. Loyd Wilson delayed his entry in the Rosebud parade to patch up our car so we could go on our way.

Our thanks to Mr. Wilson.

FISHERMEN cast for bass and bream as sun burns away morning mist over Alligator Bayou in the Louisiana delta southeast of Baton Rouge. A network of canals has made delta swamps and bayous more accessible, but damaged region's ecology.

Man-Made Canal Network Alters Louisiana Delta

Some "highways" in Louisiana were hacked out with canoe paddles at the turn of the century--and are still in use.

But the modern machinery that has cut wider watery routes through the state's Mississippi delta region is changing drainage patterns and increasing the salinity of the wetlands, says Dr. Donald W. Davis of Nicholls State University.

Hunters and trappers pushing into the state's vast delta used pirogues, small, lightweight craft able to float in a scant three inches of water. Where there were no channels, they hacked paths with their paddles through swampland and floating vegetation.

From 3 Feet to 200

These canals, known locally as trainasses, gradually widened and deepened over the years through frequent use, the flow of water currents, and storm activity, the National Geographic Society says.

Dr. Davis found that a trainass in Barataria Bay, started half a century ago when one man dug a ditch a foot deep and 40 inches wide, has grown until now it is a channel 10 feet deep and 200 feet across.

Today hundreds of miles of trainasses traverse the swamps and marshes of southern Louisiana. They are used for agriculture, transportation, and logging.

The earliest canals were carved by duck hunters and were just wide enough for a single boat. During the 1920s trappers extended the trails and carved out new ones.

Not long ago, a retired trapper told a National Geographic writer what those years were like in the swamps and bayous.

"When I was 18, I shot over 100 ducks every day for 14 days in a row and sold them to New Orelans restaurants," related Isedore Barrois.

Wistfully, the old man added: "With a pirogue, a paddle, a pole, there was nothing a man couldn't do. The way it used to be, why, it was country that God invented for himself."

More Canals, More People

Chopping a path with a paddle was too slow as more people entered the water region. Paddles were replaced with shovels bent into hoes, then with long-handled knives and rakes.

Bateau-shaped mudboats driven by air-cooled inboard engines skimmed across the swamps, tearing up vegetation and leaving fresh channels in their wakes.

These have been followed with ditch-digging boats armed with pairs of cutting blades at the bows, and tracked marsh buggies that can rip open a six-foot-wide canal 12 miles long in a single day.

Early marsh-dwellers marked the areas of their trap lines with cane poles and their neighbors respected these boundaries. But the trappers didn't own the land, and the people who did began leasing it to hunting parties and oil and logging companies and others.

The newcomers cut new canals and widened old ones. And where the trappers had been careful never to cut across a ridge, the new pathways followed direct routes that cut through ridges and other natural obstacles.

Guard To Hold Annual Reunion

The Central Texas National Guard Association will hold its 4th annual reunion on Saturday, August 23, Sam H. Cater Jr., has announced.

The meeting will be held in the National Guard Armory in Temple beginning at 4 p.m.

The Association's members are former Guardsmen who served in various Central Texas Guard units between 1947 and 1969, mostly in the old 649th Batallion of the 49th Armored Division.

The reunion's schedule calls for registration of members to begin at 4 p.m. Saturday afternoon, followed by committee meetings. Then there will be a new feature--a mock "trial" of a half dozen former officers headed by Lt. Col. Olin F. Brewster, long-time commander of the 649th Btn., who will be charged with being outstanding leaders and producing top-flight Guard units. The meeting will conclude with a barbeque dinner and end about 8:30 p.m.

Reuters International News Briefs

NANTES, FRANCE

Pop groups are blending old Celtic ballads and hard rock music to create a youthful vogue for Breton nationalism. Brandishing electric guitars and the biniou, Britanny's version of the bagpipe, the singers lend a vivid tough to a protest movement that France finds it hard to take seriously, despite outbursts of violence ande extremism.

BABYLON, IRAQ

The Tower of Babel, the Hanging Gardens, and the rest of King Nebuchadnezzar's ancient capital of Babylon may soon be rebuilt a few miles from their original site. The city, which was the center of civilization and culture from about 200 B.C. up to the time of the Greeks, is now little more than a series of broken foundations and sun-baked bricks. A plan to rebuild the city to its former glory over the original foundations now seems likely to be ditched in favor of reconstruction some distance from the original site.

SINGAPORE

For a gambler who wins enough to travel, the Far East offers a wide scope of betting, from the skills of mahjong to the bloody spectacle of a cockfight. But a mixture of concern about the dangers of uninhibited gambling and the amount of revenue available in gaming taxes has led to an equally wide range of government controls. State lotteries offering a relative fortune for a few coins are now a common feature of the region.

SAIGON

South Vietnam will move from military to civilian rule through "People's Revolutionary Committees" and eventually merge with the North, according to the chairman of the nation Liberation Front's central committee, Nguyen Huu Tho. Tho, who is also chairman of the Council of Advisers of the provisional revolutionary government, declined to set dates for these developments, but told Reuter that discussions were now going on to remove obstacles in the way of reunification.

NEW YORK

If New York's mayor, Abraham Beame, looks a worried man these days--in contrast to the smiling, happy photograph of himself and his wife on his desk--it's because his city seems to be suffering one financial mugging after another. New York, once America's richest city, is finding that the bills from a decade of borrowing are coming due and that it does not have the money to meet them.

SILINHOT, INNER MONGOLIA

On the high grasslands of northern China, Mongolian herdsmen still live in felt tents, lasso horses,and gulp milk wine. Although they account for only five percent of the inner Mongolia's varied peoples, Mongolians retain their language, dress, and customs. Their population, now 440,000, grows steadily. But 27 years of Chinese communist rule has led to big changes on the steppe. The herdsmen are now commune members, some have put down roots and their way of life has been reduced to short,seasonal migration.

Mechanic Sets Record For Surviving Among Sharks

By Robert Evans

ODESSA Reuter--Valery Kosyak, a 25-year old mechanic in the Soviet Union's Black Sea merchant fleet has set up a nightmare record by surviving for four hours among sharks.

Kosyak, married with two small children, was swept overboard from a freighter on the voyage from Odessa to North Vietnam during a storm in the Indian Ocean 600 miles south of Sri Lanka, and sound himself surrounded by a shoal of maneaters.

"At first when I felt something brushing at my legs I thought it was driftwood. But then I was hit hard and turned over in the water," he told local reporters when he was flown home after the ordeal.

"When I opened my eyes, I say this pig-like snout sticking out of the sea in front of me, then it dipped and disappeared. At first I didn't realize it was a shark and by the time I did there were several more."

The sharks, which surrounded him in a circle, were about 9 to 15 feet long. "They were diving in and out of the waves. I was petrified, but I tried to float flat on the water so they wouldn't go for my feet," he said.

"They kept circling 15-18 feet away. When I realized they weren't going to attack immediately, I began to think a bit more clearly. I said to myself 'Don't panic' and started to swim slowly.

"The circle widened a bit, but they moved with me. I didn't hurry because it was obvious I could never shake them off. I knew I just had to keep up my strength until the ship came back. And I knew it would.

"Trouble was I never liked swimming very much. Even when we're at the beach I never spend more than a few minutes in the water. I think it's because when I was a boy I got a cramp and almost drowned in the River Dnepr."

As he swam, Kosyak found himself talking to the sharks, "I was swearing and then cooing at them, ordering them, even threatening them, and even begging them. But they just kept going round and round.

"All I could do was keep swimming in the direction my ship had disappeared. I was steering myself by the sun, although it was pretty difficult to keep on course because I was swimming into the waves. Still it helped me forget the sharks."

Two hours went by before his shipmates noticed Kosyak was missing. The freighter immediately turned back and found him after another two hours. But, according to the Captain's log, the sharks kept circling until Kosyak was lifted on board.

The government newspaper Izvestia asked French underwater explorer Jacques-Yves Cousteau to comment on the incident.

"A unique case," it quoted him as saying. "I've head of people surviving an hour or two among sharks. But four. . .never."

Yoemen Start Season With Two-A-Days

Eighty-six young men started the season as two-a-days started this past Monday, according to head coach Ed Cauley. The members went as high as 95, according to Cauley.

Coach Cauley said the workouts were going real well and that everything was looking good.

"Most of the young men came back in real good shape after the summer vacation and we don't have anyone that is overweight." Cauley said.

Cauley also said "We used the two-a-days to learn how to do things and now we're going to get after it with the pads. on. The whole team has a real good attitude and we're extremely pleased with what we see so far."

The 29 varsity hopefuls include 17 lettermen with 9-7 starters returning from the 10-1-2 record of last season.
